ADVERTISEMENT.

On the first institution of the College of Fort William, the Governor General, Marquis Wellesley, was pleased to request Colonel Kirkpatrick, Mr. Edmonstone, and myself, to undertake the temporary superintendence of the Persian department. Happy at being united in office with such distinguished characters, and encouraged by the patronage of the illustrious sounder, I then communicated to my colleagues my design of preparing, for the use of the students, correct editions of some of the most approved Persian classics, with notes and verbal indexes. In forming this resolution, I was actuated solely by my desire to promote the advancement of Persian literature, without looking for any pecuniary remuneration from government.

During the short period of my stay in the College, I was only able to draw the outlines of my plan; but since my appointment to my present office, where, from situation, I am almost entirely secluded from society, I have employed the intervals of leisure in the execution of my arduous undertaking. After four years labour, I have prepared for the press the Gúlislán and Bóstán of Sády, the Behárislán of Jámy, the Uhhláhulmúhsinec of Cáshefy, with the Iyár-e-dánish and three volumes of letters by Abulfuzl: to which will be added, sketches of the lives, and remarks on the writings, of those eminent authors. The whole, making eight quarto volumes, will be published as speedily as possible, either in Calcutta or in England, as circumstances may allow.

To the Gülislân I have added a complete English version. The other works have only notes and verbal indexes; my advanced time of life not allowing me to persevere any farther in this laborious undertaking: and more especially, as I am under engagement to Government to compile a practical Dictionary of the Persian language.

Having thus completed my original defign, in regard to the Perfian clafficks, I shall now proceed to print the Dictionary, which I slatter myfelf will be published in the year 1806. It will be composed of three parts, viz. Part I. a practical Dictionary, Perfian Arabick and English. Part II. Persian Phraseology, consisting of numerous examples. Part III. a practical Dictionary, English and Persian. By the means of my notes and the verbal indexes to the Persian classicks, I now possess examples of upwards of thirty thousand Persian and Arabick words, from which I shall make a selection of familiar phrases, for the second part of the Dictionary.

OF THE PRESENT EDITION OF THE GULISTAN.

The text is founded on a very valuable copy, in the Nufkh character, which has been collated with five other manuscripts, besides the printed edition of Gentius, and that published in Calcutta. Gentius comes the nearest to the old manuscript, but the Calcutta copy possesses considerable merit, being much more correct than the generality of manuscripts procurable in Hindoossan.

In the English part, I have omitted a few passages, which although not offensive to the coarse ideas of native readers, could not possibly be translated into our language, without transgressing the bounds of decency. The learned reader will discover these sew chasins, particularly in the 5th, 6th, and 7th chapters.

From the nature and extent of my plan, a very flender critic may easily find particular places for animal vertical; but those who are capable of appreciating the labour of such an undertaking, will candidly pass sentence on the general merit of the performance, and make liberal allowance for any trilling errors, that may happen to fall under their observation.

THE METHOD RECOMMENDED FOR STUDYING THIS WORK.

With the help of the notes and index, the student should be required to give, in English, the literal sense of the original. Then, let the Professor compare the student's translation with the English version; and point out any peculiarities of idiom, together with such improvements as his experience may enable him to suggest.

Praise to the God of majesty and glory, whose service is the means of approach; and to offer him grateful acknowledgments, insures an increase of bounty. Every breath when inhaled suftaineth life, and when respired it exhibitates the body: consequently every breathing includes two benefits, each of which demandeth a distinct acknowledgment. What hand or tongue can suffil his praise? Sing praises we posterity of David, for few of my servants are grateful.—It is best for the servant to confess his weakness, and implore forgiveness at the court of heaven, since no one is able to sulfil his duty towards God. The rain of his infinite mercy refresheth all places; and the table of his bounty is spread far and near. Amidit the enormous sins of his servants, he rendeth not the veil of their reputation; and during the commission of atrocious offences, ceaseth not to bestow their daily bread.

O merciful God, who out of thine hidden treasures affordest daily sustenance to the Guebre and the insidel; how canst thou exclude thy friends, thou who deignest thus savourably to regard thine enemies. He commandeth his chamberlain the zephyr to spread the emerald carpet, and ordereth the vernal clouds to softer the infant plants in the eradle of the earth. He clotheth the bodies of the trees with verdant solings, the sedal garments of spring, and in celebration of the return of that season, crowneth the youthful branches with garlands of blossoms. By his power, the juice of the cane is converted into delicious honey; and by his discipline, the kernel of the date becometh a losty tree. Clouds and wind, the moon, the sun and the sky are all busied, that thou, O man, mayest obtain thy bread, and eat it not in neglect. For thy sake, all these revolve and are obedient: it is not therefore consistent with the rules of justice that thou only shouldest not obey. There is a tradition of the chief of created beings, the meet noble of existences, the mercy of the universe, Behold the mercy and kindness of God, he is himself ashamed that his servant hath sinned! Those who constantly reside at the temple of his glory, consess the insufficiency of their worship, saying, "We have not worshipped thee in the manner that thou oughtest to be served." And they who would describe the form of his beauty, are rapt in amazement, declaring "We have not known thee as thou oughtest to be known." If any one should require me to describe him, how shall the disheartened describe that which hath no form? The lovers are slain by the beloved, and no voice proceeds the from the dead. A devout man in deep contemplation with his head reclined on the bosom of meditation, was immersed in the eccan of vision.—When he recovered from that state, one of his companions by way of pleasantry said.—"What miraculous present have you brought me from this garden, which you have been visiting?" He answered "It was my intention, that when I reached the rost bush, I would still my lap with flowers, for presents to my friends; but when I came to the spot, the older so

The banquet is concluded, and the period of life is arrived: I continue describing thee the same as at the commencement.

THE VIRTUES OF THE MONARCH OF ISLAMISM, MAY GOD PERPETUATE HIS REIGN.

The favourable mention of Sady which has fallen from the mouths of people in general, and the famo of his fayings that has spread over the whole surface of the globe, so that the words of his sriendly pen are eaten like sugar; and the value given to his scraps of writings, insomuch that they pass current like bills of exchange: all this cannot be ascribed to the perfection of his own merit and eloquence, but is owing to the monarch of the earth, who is the axis of the revolution of time, the representative of Solomon, the defender of the faithful, the mighty king of kings, the illustrious Atabuk Mozusffaruddeen Abbobukr, the son of Sid, the son of Zungy, the shadow of God on earth; approve him O Lord and grant his desires. He regarded me with the eye of kindness, loaded me with commendation, and shewed a sincere attachment; and therefore, for his sake, persons of all descriptions have taken a sancy to me: for mankind readily adopt the sentiments of their King. From the time that you have looked kindly on my humble state, my merits are more manifest than the sun.—If your servant was made up of desects, every sault that the Sultan might commend would be construed into an excellence. One day in the bath a piece of persumed clay came to me from the hand of a friend, I said to it, "Art thou must, or an artistical compound of sweets? for I am charmed with thy delightful odour." It answered "I was a worthless piece of clay, but having for a season associated with the rose, the virtue of my companion was communicated to me; otherwise I am the same identical earth that I was at first."

O God! bestow happiness on the Mostems by a long continuance of his life; increase the reward of his virtues, and perfections; exalt the dignity of his friends and of his governors; and send destruction on his avowed and secret foes, for the sake of those sayings recorded in the verses of the Koran. O Lord! protect his kingdom, and be thou the guardian of his son.—Of a truth the world enjoys happiness through his means, may his own good fortune be perpetual, and may God bestriend him with the standard of victory; in such wise, may the branch also sourcish of which the king is the root; since the goodly produce of the soil dependent on the excellency of the seed. Within the city were men with minds virtuous as angels, and without was an army of warlike liona. On my return I found the land at peace; the tigers having forfaken their favage dispositions. Thus at first, I beheld the world full of tumult, forrow, and strife, and it has changed to its present happy state in the reign of the just monarch Atabuk Absobuke Ben Sad Zungy. The land of Perila is in no danger of suffering distress, so long as it is governed by one life thyseis, who are the shadow of God. At this day, no one can point out on the surface of the earth an afylum of comfort like the threshold of thy gate. It is thy duty to support the helpless, and it behoovesh us to offer up grateful meknowledgments, whilst the reward is with God, the creator of the universe. O God preserve the land of Persia from the storms of strife, as long as the earth and the air shall endure.

THE CAUSE OF WRITING THE GULISTAN.

One right I was reflecting on the time which had alapted, and lamenting that so much of my life was spent; I pierced the stony mansion of my heart with adamantine tears, and repeated the following lines as applicable to my condition.

account. Alas! thou half fpent fifty years in fleep, excepting these five days that thou hast been awakened to reflection. Shame on that man who departed without finishing his work; who when the drum was beaten for marching, had not made up his burthen. Sweet sleep on the day of marching, with holds the traveller from his way. Every one who came erceled a new fabric; he departed, and evacuated the tenement for another to enter; and this, in like manner, formed new schemes; but no one ever finished the building. Place no reliance on an unsteady friend, the liar deserveth not belief. Since both the good and the had must die, happy is that man who carries off the ball of virtue. Send to your own tomb the provisions for the journey; no one will bring them after you, therefore dispatch them before your departure. Life is snow, and the fummer sun advangeth: only a small part remaineth unmelted, art thou yet slothful! you who have gone empty handed to market, I fear will not return with a full napkin. Whofoever eateth his wheat before it is ripe, must glean ears of corn at the time of harvest.

Listen attentively to the admonition of Sady; the road is such as I have described it, be of good cheer, and proceed on your journey. After deliberating on the subject, it appeared to me adviseable, that I should make choice of retirement, and withdrawing myself from society, erase from the tablet of my memory all vain words, and refrain from conversation.

One deprived of the faculty of speech, who sitteth in a corner deaf and dumb, is preserable to him who cannot govern his tongue. At length one of my friends, the intimate and familiar partner of my travels, and companion of my cell, entered the door, and accosted me after his usual manner; but in return for all his pleasantry and mirth, and inclination to similiar intercourse, I gave no answer, nor raised up my head from the knees of aderation. He looked displeased and said, "Whilst you have the power of utterance, speak, O my brother, with savour and kindness, for to-morrow, when the messenger of sate arriveth, you will through ne"cessity be silent."

One of my comrades informed him how matters flood, faying. "Such an one hath politively refolved to fpend the remainder of his life in devotion, and to otherwe filence, follow his example, it you are able, and keep him company." He replied, "I (wear by the great God, and by our long unintermode, and keep him company." He replied, "I (wear by the great God, and by our long unintermode friendship, that I will neither breath, nor stir a step until he hath answered with his accurlemed freedom; for it is folly to distress our friends, when an inconfiderate eath can be easily expiated. It is contrary to justice, and opposite to the fentiments of the wise, that the sword of Aly should remain in the scalbard, or that the tongue of Sidy should cleave to the rost of the mouth. To what shall be likened the tongue in a man's mouth. It is the key of the treasury of wisdom: when the door is shut, who can discover whether he deals in jewels or in small ware? Although in the estimation of the wise, silence is commendable, yet at a preper scalon, free speech is preferable.

Two things "indicate an obscure understanding, to be filent when we ought to converse and to "speak when we should be filent." To be brief, I was not able to restrain my tongue from speaking to him: I thought it inhuman to turn my face from him because he was an agreeable and sincere frient. When you determine to fight be sure either that you are stronger than your adversary, or that you have a swifter pair of heels. Thus through necessity I spoke; and went abroad in good humour. It was the season of spring, the air was temperate and the rose in full bloom. The resements of the trees resembled the session of the fortunate.

It happened once, that I was benighted in a garden in company with one of my friends. The fpot was delightful, the trees intertwined, you would have faid that the earth was bedeeked with glass spangles, and that the knot of the Pleiades was suspended from the branch of the vine. A garden with a running stream, and trees from whence birds were warbling melodious strains; that filled with tulips of various hues; these loaded with fruits of several kinds. Under the shade of its trees the zephyr had spread the variegated carpet. In the morning when the defire to return home overcame our inclination for remaining, I saw in his lap a collection of roses, adoriferous herbs, and hyacinths which he had intended to carry to town. I said, "You are not ignorant that the flower of the garden soon fadeth, and "What course is then to be pursued." I replied "I am able to form a book of roles, which will delight the beholders, and gratify those who are present; whose leaves the tyrannic arm of the autumnal blasts can never asked, nor injure the blossoms of its spring. What benefit will you derive from a basket of slowers? carry a leaf from my garden; a rose may continue in bloom of for sive or six days; but this rose garden will slourish for ever." As soon as I had uttered these words, he slung the slowers from his lap, and laying hold on the skirt of my garment exclaimed. "When the beneficent promise, they faithfully discharge their engagements." In the course of a few days, two chapters (one on the comforts of society, and the other containing rules for conversation.") were written out in my note book, in a style that may be useful to orators, and improve the skill of letter writers. EXCUSE FOR THE OMISSION OF PERSONAL SERVICE; AND THE CAUSE OF CHOOSING RETIREMENT.

My deficiency and backwardness in the strenuous discharge of personal service at the palace of sovereignty, resembles the story told of Buzerchemeher; how that when a number of the sages of Hind were discoursing of his virtues, they could discover in him only this sault, that he hesitated in his speech, so that his hearers were kept a long time in suspense before he delivered his thoughts. Buzerchemeher over-heard their conversation and observed. "It is better to deliberate before I speak than to repent of what I have said." Old men of experience who know the value of words, resemble, and then speak. Expend not your breath in talking idly; speak to the purpose, and mind not if your delivery should be slow. First think and then speak, but stop before they say it is enough. Man excelleth the brute creation by the faculty of speech; but you are beneath the brute if you make an improper use of that gift. But relying on the liberal disposition of the great, who shut their eyes on the defects of the humble, and strive not to expose the faults of inferiors, I have in a summary form comprised in this book morals and choice tales, embellished with verses and relations of meritorious deeds of Kings: in collecting materials for which, I have spent a confiderable part of my life. These were my reasons for writing the Gülistan. May God savor me with his aid! These verses and recitals will last for years, when every particle of dust of which I am compounded, will be dispersed. The intention in drawing this picture is, that it may remain after me; seeing that existence is sleeting, unless a devout person should one day, out of compassion, bestow his blessing on the works of the Durwaishes. Having maturely deliberated on the general arrangement of the book, the order of the chapters and abridging the stile of the language, it seemed advisable that this verdant garden, planted like paradise, should also resemble it by having eight gates.

THE GÛLISTÂN.

CHAPTER THE FIRST.

ON THE MORALS OF KINGS.

TALE 1.

I have heard, that a certain monarch having commanded a captive to be put to death, the poor wretch, in a fit of despair, began to abuse and repreach the King, in his own language; according to the saying "Whosover washeth his hands of life, uttereth whatever is in his heart." A man without hope speaketh boldly; as the cat when driven to despair, seizeth the dog: in the time of need, when it is impossible to escape, the hand graspeth the sharp edged sword." The King asked "What doth he say" One of the Viziers, who was of a benevolent disposition, replied; "O my Lord, he said, the Almighty befriendeth him who stifleth his anger and is merciful to his sellow creatures. "The king had compassion on him and spared his life. Another Vizier, of a contrary temper, said," It becometh not persons of our rank cently." The King was displeased at his speech, and said, "I am more satisfied with that salsehood, than with this truth, which you have uttered; because that was well intended, and this is sounded on malignity; and the sages have declared, that salsehood mixed with good advice, is preserable to truth tending to excite strife. "When a King is guided by the advice of another, woe he unto him if he speaketh any thing but good. On the portice of the hall of Feredoon was written, The world, O my brother, continueth not to any one, place your assessions on the creater of the universe, and that will sussee. Make no reliance, neither rest upon the kingdom of this world; seeing how many like yourself it hath nourished and killed." When the pure soul is about to depart, what is the difference between expiring on a thrane or on the bart ground.

TALE II.

One of the Kings of Kheralan law in a dream Sultan Mahmood Sebuktegeen, an hundred years after his death, when the whole of his body had fallen into pieces and become dust, excepting his eyes which moved in the fockets and looked about. All the Philosophers were at a loss to explain the meaning, excepting a Durwaish who aftermaking his obeilance faid. "He is still looking about, because his Kingdom is pesselfed by others." Many men of renown whom they have buried in the ground, have not less any traces of their existence on the surface of the earth. That old corpse which they had deposited in the grave, his dust is so decayed that not a single bone of him remains. The happy name of Nushirvan still exists through his liberality, although a long season hath clapsed since his departure. Do good, O man, and account your life as gain, before the report is spread that such an one is no more.

I heard of a King's fon, who was low in stature and ill favoured, which all his brothers were tall and handsome. Once on a time, his father looked at him with disjust, which the son had sagacity enough to discover, and said. "O father! a short man, who is wife, is presentable to him who is tall and ignorant. Not every thing is valued according to its height; the sheep is clean, and the elephant an unclean animal. Sinai is one of the most inconfiderable monitains of the earth, but verily it is the greatest before Go! in rank and dignity. Have you heard, what was said one day by a wife lean man, to a fat blockhead? One Arab have, though lean is preferable to a stable full of asses." The father laughed, the courtiers applied to the brothers were mortified to the very stat! Until a man lath spoken, his defects and his skill are concealed.

Imagine not every defert to be empty, for perhaps a tiger may be there affeep. I heard that at that time a powerful enemy appeared against the King, and when the two armies met, the first person who impelled his horse into the action, was this young Prince calling out. "I am not him, whose back you shall see in the day of battle, but my head may be found in dost and blood: for whosever fighteth the battle staketh his own life, and he who dieth, sporteth with the blood of his troops." Having thus said he attacked the troops of the enemy, and overthrew several men of renown. When he came to his father; he bowed down to the earth and said: "O ye to whom my some appeared contemptible, without considering the force of my valour.

The troopers animated by this speech, joined in the general attack, and are reported to have gained the victory over the adversary on that day. The King killed his head and eyes and folded him in his arms and his affection towards him enercased daily, till at length he appointed him his facecessor. The brothers became envious, and put postern into his food. His lister seeing this from a window, stapped to the shutters, and he understanding the signal, withdrew his hand from the dish, and exclaimed. A gang of Arabian rolbers had affembled on the top of a mountain, and blocked up the read of the caravan. The inhabitants were diffressed by their stratagems, and the treops of the Sultan everpowered; because the thieves, having possessed themselves of a fortress on the summit of the mountain, made this strong hold their fixed residence. The counsellors of the King's party consulted together, how to remove this grievance, because if they were suffered to continue any time in this state, they would become too powerful to be subdued. but should it continue some time in that state, it could not be cradicated even by a windlass. It is possible to stop the course of a spring with a bodkin, which when formed into a full stream, cannot be forded by an elephant. They came to the determination to send one as a spy, to watch the opportunity when the thieves should be gone to attack a tribe, and the place evacuated. They detached a party of approved men, who consealed themselves in the pass of the mountains. In the evening, when the robbers returned from their expedition with their plunder, they laid aside their weapons, and deposited their spoil. The sirst enemy who attacked them was sleep, about the end of the first watch of the night. The sum's disk passed into shadow, Jonas entered into the whale's belly. The gallant men sprang out of the ambush, and pinioned the robbers one after another. In the morning they were brought to the palace, when the King gave orders for them all to be put to death.

There happened to be amongst them a lad, the first struits of whose youth were yet immature, the freshness of his cheeks, resembled a rosebud in early spring. One of the Viziers kissed the foot of the King's throne, and bowed his head to the earth in intercession, saying. "This boy, hath not like the rest, tasted the fruit of the garden of life, nor ever enjoyed the harvest of the season of youth. I therefore venture to hope from your majesty's known elemency, that you will oblige your servant, by sparing the lad's blood." The King looked displeased at these words, as they did not accord with his enlightened understanding, and he observed that an evil root will not thrive in a goodly shade. To educate the worthless, is like throwing a walnut upon a dome; it is better to eradicate them altogether; for to extinguish the fire, and suffer a spark to remain; or to kill the snake, and preserve the young, is not assing like a wise man:

Though the clouds should pour down the water of life, you would never gather fruit from the branch of the willow. Waste not your time on low people, for we can never obtain sugar from the reed. "When the Vizier heard these words, he reluctantly approved of them, and praised the King for his just observation, saying." May the King live for ever, nothing can he more true than what my lord hath pronounced, that if he had continued with these wicked wretches, he would naturally have fallen into their evil courses, and would have become one of them; but your servant entertains hopes, that this boy, by associating with men of probity, will receive instruction and imbibe virtuous sentiments; for being but a child, his principles cannot be tainted with the lawless and inimical disposition of that banditti, for in the Hadees it is recorded. "Of a truth every one is born with a disposition to Islamism, and it is owing to his parents his becoming a Jew, a Christian ex a Majoosie." but the dog of the companions of the cave, by long converse with the virtuous, became a rational creature." The Vinier having thus concluded his speech, some of the courtiers joined in his petition till at length the King spared the life of the youth, and said, " I grant your request, altho' I disapprove of it. Know you not what Zal said to Rustem? Consider not any enemy as weak and contemptible. I have frequently seen water issue from a small spring, which so increased in its course, that it carried away the camed with his load." Summarily, the Vizier took the youth into his family, and educated him with kindness and attention. An able master was appointed his tutor, who tought him how to ask a question, and return an answer with elegance, together all the accord, listments requisite for court, so that his manners met with general approbation. Once when the Vizier mentioned to the King some particulars of the youth's disposition and manners, and was saying that wife education had made impression on him, and that his former ignerance was sected out of his mind; the King laughed at those expressions and said.

Two years after this convertation, a fet of vagabouts of the town entered into a confpiracy with him, and taking an opportunity, he killed the Vizier, and his two fons, carried off an immense booty, and fueceeding his father as the head of the gang became an avowed offender. The King appriled thereof, in the emotion of amazement, exclaimed, "How can any one form a good fword out of bad iron? I saw at the gate of Ughulmish an officer's son, who was endowed with wisdom and sagacity beyond description: even his childhood was distinguished by proofs of superior abilities. The star of sublimity shone on his head thro' wisdom. Summarily, he obtained favour in the sight of the Sultan, on account of his beauty and acute understanding, according to the saying of the sages, "Ability, and not riches constitutes worth; greatness dependent on skill, and not on years." His companions became envious, and accusing him salfely of dishonesty, made a fruitless attempt to deprive him of life. But what can the enemy do against him who hath an affured friend. The King asked him, "What is the cause of their striving against you?" He replied, "Under the shade

They tell a flory of one of the Kings of Persia, that he had stretched out the hand of opports of his subjects, and exercised tyranny and violence. By his repeated alls of injustice, the people were compelled to emigrate to different countries, beyond the reach of his power. When his subjects were diminished, the resources of his government were lessened, his treasury was exhausted, and powerful enemies pressed him on all quarters. Whosever looketh for assistance in the day of adversity, let him exercise humanity in the season of prosperity. If you do not treat kindly the servant with the ring on his ear, he will depart; they were reading in the Shahnameh, the history of the decline of the kingdom of Zohac, and the reign of Ferideon. The Vizier asked the King, "Since Ferideon had neither money nor territory nor troops, how did it happen that the kingdom was conferred on him?" He answered, "In the manner you have heard, the people joined him, and through their strength he gained the kingdom." The Vizier rejoined, "Seeing that collecting people together is the means of forming a kingdom, why then do you make them disperse, unless you do not defire to govern? It is advisable to cherish the army at the risk of your life, as the Sultan deriveth his power from his troops." The King asked, "What methods are to be taken to collect together troops and subjects?" The Vizier replied, "The monarch must be just, to induce them to approach him, and merciful that they may enjoy peace in the shade of his government; but you possess neither of these qualities. A tyrant cannot govern a kingdom, as a wolf cannot perform the office of a stepherd. The tyrannic prince saps the soundation of his own empire." The king was offended at the Vizier's wise admonition, and ordered him to be bound, and committed to prison. A short time after, the sons of the King's uncle commenced hostilities, and appeared in arms, and claimed possessing the following them is till at length the King was dispossessed of the kingdom, and they obtained it.

The King who suffers the poor to be oppressed, will find, in the day of adversity, his friends become powerful foes. Be on good terms with your subjects, and sit down secure from the attack of your enemy; for to a just monarch, his subjects are an army.

A King was fitting in a vessel with a Persian slave. The boy having never before seem the sea, nor experienced the inconvenience of a ship, began to cry and lament, and his whole body was in a tremor. Notwithstanding all the soothings that were offered, he would not be pacified. The King's diversion was interrupted, and no remedy could be found. A philosopher who was in the ship, said, "If you will command me, I will silence him." The King replied, "It will be an act of great kindness." The philosopher ordered them to throw the boy into the sea, and after several plunges, they laid hold of the hair of his head, and dragging him towards the ship, he clang to the rudder with both his hands.

When he got out of the water, he sat down quietly in a corner of the vessel. The King was pleased, and asked how this was brought about: The philosopher replied, "At first he had never experienced the danger of being drowned; neither knew he the safety of a ship." In like manner, he knoweth the value of prosperity, who hath encountered adversity. O thou who hast satisfied thine hunger, to there a barley loaf is hencath notice, that seems loveliness to me, which in thy sight appears deformity. "The poor and the rich are fervants of this earth, and those who are richest have the greatest wants." He then looked towards me and said. "Because Durwaishes are strenuous and sincere in their commerce with heaven, unite your prayers with mine, for I am in dread of a powerful enemy." I replied, "Shew mercy to the weak peasant, that you may not experience difficulty from a strong enemy. It is criminal to crush the poor and desenceless subjects with the arm of power. He was angry, and turned away his face from him, and to this point men of wisdom and experience have observed that we ought to guard against the sury and rage of Kings, for frequently their thoughts are engressed by important affairs of state, and they cannot endure interruption from the vulgar. Whosoever watches not a sit opportunity, must expect nothing from the King's savor: till you perceive a convenient time for conversing, lose not your own consequence by talking to no purpose. One of the former Kings was negligent in protecting his dominions, and having foffered his troops to be in diffrefs, when a powerful enemy appeared, they forfook him. When pay is withheld from the troops, they are unwilling to put their hands to their favors. Being intimately acquainted with one who had deferted his post, I repreached him faying, " it is base, diffreputable, mean and ungrateful, when upon a triffing change of condition, a man forfakes his old master, unmindful of the favors of many years. He replied, " if I should tell you the state of the case, you would acquit me; perhaps my horse was without barley, and my saddle cloth in pawn; and the Prince who through avarice with-holds the pay of his foldiers does not deserve that they should expose their lives in his service. of whose company made such an impression as bestowed comfort on his mind. The King was again favourably disposed towards him, and ordered that he should be reinstated; to which the Vizier would not consent, saying, that degradation was presentable to employment. "They who are seated in the corner of retirement, close the dog's teeth and men's mouths. They tear their papers and break their pens, and are delivered from the hands and tongues of slanderers." The King said "of a truth we stand in need of a man of such sufficiency for the administration of our government." The Vizier observed that the proof of a man's being sufficiently wise, was his not engaging in such matters. The Homai is honored above all other birds, because it feeds on bones, and injures not any living creature. Parable. They asked a Syangooth why do you choose the service society to by the Lion?

He replied, "because I cat the remains of his hunting, and live guarded from the machinations of my enemies, under the protection of his valour." They asked, "now that you are under the shadow of his protection, and gratefully acknowledge his beneficence, why do you not approach nearer, so as to be brought into the circle of his principal servants, and to be numbered amongst his favourite ministers?" He replied, "I am not so considered of my safety from his severity." If the Gueber lights the fire an hundred years, yet should he fall into it, for, an instant, he would be burnt. It may happen that a King's minister obtains money; or he may chance to lote his head. The sages have said, "beware of the inconstant disposition of princes, who sometimes are distainshed at a salutation; and sometimes in return for rusieness will bestow a dress of honor." And they have also observed wit is an accomplishment in a courtier, but a blemith in the character of a wife man. Preserve the dignity of your own character, and leave sport and bussionery to courtiers.

At that juncture, it happened, that in company with a number of my friends, I undertook a pilgrimage to Mecca. When we returned from the pilgrimage, he came out two days journey to meet me. Seeing him in diffressed circumstances, habited like a durwaish, I asked him the cause, to which he replied, "It has happened just as you predicted: some persons out of envy charged me with unfair practices, the King did not order investigation of the circumstances, and my old acquaintances, and kind friends opened not their lips in my justification, forgetful of our former intimacy. When by the will of God any one falls, the whole world trample upon his head. When they see good fortune befriending him, they praise him with their hands upon their breasts. In short, I was overwhelmed with persecutions, until this week, when the good news of the safe arrival of the pilgrims being recieved, I was released from close confinement, with the confiscation of my patrimonial estate." I replied, "at that time you would not line to my suggestion, that the service of Kings is like voyaging on the sea, profitable, but hazardous; either you acquire riches or perish in the waves.

I heard of a collector of the revenues, who defolated the houses of the subjects, in order to fill the King's coffers; regardless of the maxim of the sages which says, "Whosever offendeth the most high to gain the heart of a sellow-creature, God will make that very creature the instrument of his destruction. The burning slame from wild rue raises not such a smoke, as is occasioned by the sighs of the assisted heart. They say that the lien is the king of beasts, and the ass the meanest of animals, but the sages all agree, that the ass who carries burthens, is preserable to the lien, that destroyeth mankind. The part als, althoused of understanding, yet on account of carrying burthens, is very valuable. The labouring Ox, and the als, are preserable to men who injure their fellow-creatures.

that some action of his having displeased the king, he mulched him, and ordered him to be chassised. The king's officers, mindful of his former benefits, considered themselves pledged thereby to shew him gratitude; therefore whilst he was under their custody, they treated him with courtesy and kindness, neither exercised any severity nor allowed any reproaches. If you wish to preserve peace with your enemy, whenever he shanders you in your absence, in return praise him to his sace; at any rate as the words will issue from the lips of the pernicious man, if you wish that his speech should not be bitter, make his mouth sweet. He was acquitted on some of the King's accusations, and for the remainder he continued in prison. One of the neighbouring princes privately sent him a message, saying. "The monarche of that quarter know not the value of such excellence, and have dishonored you: if the precious mind of such an one, (may God prosper his suture undertakings,) will condescent to look towards us, we, out of reverence to his virtue, will exert our utmost endeavours to satisfy him, since the rulers of these deminions, will be henored by the fight of him,

"The minister understood the contents, and reflecting on the danger to which he was exposed, wrote a short answer, such as to him appeared advisable, on the back of the letter, and despatched it. One of the King's attendants, being informed of the circumstances, apprized the king thereof, and said, such an one, whom you ordered into confinement, holds correspondence with the neighbouring princes. The king was wroth, and ordered that the affair thould be investigated. If a person is vigilant in the service of a monarch during two days, on the third day he will certainly be regarded with kindness. The fincere worshippers entertain expectation that they shall not return from the threshold of God unrewarded. Obedience insures greatness, whilft disobedience leads to a repulse: whosoever possesseth the qualities of righteousness, placeth his head on the threshold of obedience.

Injure not the inhabitants of this world, that the fighs of the oppressed may not ascend to heaven." The oppresser was displeased at his words, frowned on him, and took no farther notice of him, until one night, when fire, issuing from the kitchen, caught the stock of wood, and consumed all his goods; when his soft bed became a feat of warm athes. It happened that this same judicious person passing by, and hearing him say to his friends, "I know not from whence this sire sell upon my house," replied, " from the smoke of the hearts of the poor." Beware of the groans of the wounded souls, since the inward fore will at length break out; oppress not to the utmost a single heart, for a single sigh has pow r to overset a whole world. On the crown of Kaikusrou was the following inscription, " for how many years, during what space of time, shall men pass over my grave? as the kingdom came to me by succession, in like manner shall it pass to the hands of others."

TALE XXVII.

A person had arrived at the head of his profession in the art of wrestling; he knew three hundred and fixty capital sleights in this art, and every day exhibited something new; but having a sincere regard for a beautiful youth, one of his scholars, he taught him three hundred and sifty-nine sleights, reserving however one sleight to himself. The youth excelled so much in skill and in strength, that no one was able to cope with him. He at length boasted, before the Sultan, that the superiority which he allowed his master to maintain over him, was out of respect to his years, and the consideration of having been his instructor; for otherwise he was not inferior in strength, and was his equal in point of skill. The king did not approve of this disrespectful conduct, and commanded that there should be a trial of skill. An extensive spot was appointed for the occasion. The ministers of state, and other grandees of the court, were in attendance. The youth, like a sufficient elephant, entered, with a percussion, that would have removed, from its base, a mountain of iron.

The master, being sensible that the youth was his superior in strength, attacked with the sleight which he had kept to himself. The youth not being able to repel it, the master with both bands listed him from the grannd, and raising him over his head, song him on the earth. The multitude shouted. The king commanded that a dress and a reward in money should be bestowed on the master; and reproved and derided the youth, for having presumed to put himself in competition with his benefactor, and for having failed in the attempt. He said, "O king, my master did not gain the vistory over me through strength or skill, but there remained a small part in the art of wrestling, which he had with held from me, and by that small seint, he got the better of me. The master observed, "I reserved it for such an occasion as the present; the sages having said, put not yourself to much in the power of your friend, that it he should be disposed to be inimical, he may be able to offer his purpose. A folitary durwaith had taken up his abode in a corner of a defert: The king passed him, and the durwaith, because retirement is the kingdom of contentment, did not lift up his head, nor show any figure of politeness. The monarch, conscious of his superior dignity, was chagrined, and said, "this tribe of ragged mendicants resemble the brute heasts;" his Vizier said to the durwaith, "when the monarch of the terrestial globe passed by you, why did not you do him homage, nor behave even with common good manners." He replied, "tell the monarch of the earth to expect service from him, who hopes to receive benefits, and let him know also, that the monarch is for the protection of his subjects, and not the subjects for the service of the king. The king is the sentinel of the poor, although affluence, pomp and power are his portion. The steep are not for the shepherd, but the shepherd is for their service. A king having commanded an innecent person to be put to death, he said "O king seek not your own injury by venting your wrath on me." The king asked in what manner. He replied, "this torture will cease with me in an instant, and the crime thereof will remain with you for ever. The space of life passeth away, like the wind over the defert; bitterness and sweetness, determity and beauty, all shall cease. The tyrant imagineth that he committeeth violence against me, but it remaineth on his own neck and passeth over me." Haroon or Rusheed, when he had completed the compact of Egypt, faid, "as a contrast to that rebel who through the pride of his pell thing the kindem of Egypt, heasted that he was God, I will bestow this kingdom on the meanest of my slaves." He had an Ethiopian blockhead, named Khofaib, to whom he gave the kingdom. They say that this man's wishdom and knowledge were so great, that when some of the samers of Egypt were complaining, that an unscatonable fall of rain had destroyed the cetton, which they had sown on the banks of the Nile, he said that they ought to sow weed. A man of discernment, upon hearing this, said, "If the augmentation of wealth depend upon knowledge, none would be so distressed as an ignorant fellow, but God bestows in a single sool, as much wealth as would associate as an ignorant fellow, but God bestows in a single sool, as much wealth as would associate without the assistance of heaven. It often happens in the world that the improdent are honored, and the wise are despised. The alengment died of grief and distress, whilst the blockhead found treasure under a ruin."

They having brought a chinese girl to a certain king, whilst he was intoxicated, he wanted to have connection with her, but the refused compliance, at which he was so much enraged that he gave her to one of his negro slaves. This fellow's upper lip reached above his nostrils, and the lower one hung pendent on his breast; his countenance was such that the demon Sakreh would have sted from him in terrer, and a fount of pitch distilled from his arm-pits. You would say that to the end of the world he will be considered as the extremity of ugliness; the same as Joseph is looked upon as the standard of beauty. One of so detestable an aspea, that it is impossible to describe his ugliness, and from his arm-pits, good God, desend us! the stench was like a corpse exposed to the sun in the month of August. The negro in the sury of his lust violated her chastity. In the morning the king inquired for the girl, and they informed him what had happened. He was enraged, and commanded that the negro and the girl should be bound fast together by their hands

One of the ministers, a man of virtuous disposition, bent his forehead to the earth, and implored mercy, saying "the negro is not criminal in this instance, since all the slaves and servants of the court, are accustomed to receive princely gifts and largestes." The king observed that he might have restained his passion for one night. He replied, "alas my lord, have you not heard the saying, When a person parched with thirst arrives at the simple spring, imagine not that he will be terrified at a stricus elephant. So if an hungry inside he alone in a house filled with viands, reason will not believe that he would pay any regard to the sast of Ramzan." Never affociate with one who frequents filthy places. A man, although thirfly, cannot relish sweet water half drunken by one who hath shinking breath. When an orange hath fallen into the dirt, how can it again be offered to the king's hand. How can the heart of the thirsty wish for water out of a slaggon, which has been touched by ulcerated lips?"

They asked Alexander the Great, "by what means have you extended your conquests from east to west, since former monarchs who exceeded you in wealth, in territory, in years, and in the number of troops never gained such victories?" He replied, "when with the assistance of God, I subdued a kingdom, I never oppressed the subjects, and always spoke well of their monarchs. The wife consider not him illustrious, who speaketh ill of the great. All the sullowing objects are nothing when passed, wealth and dominion, command and prohibition, war and conquest: injure not the name of those who have died with a good reputation, in order, that in return, your own good name may be immortal."

CHAPTER II.

Of the morals of Durwaishes. TALE I.

A certain personage asked a devout man, what he faid of the state of a particular abid, of whose character others had spoken disrespectfully. He replied, " I see no fault in his exterior, and am ignorant of what is concealed within him. Whomfoever thou feeft in a religious habit, consider as a pieus and a good man, if you know not what is hidden in his mind: what bulinels hath the Mohtelib with the infide of the house."

TALE II.

I saw a durwaish who having placed his forchead on the threshold of the temple of Mecca, was lamenting, and faying, " O gracious and most merciful God, thou knowest what can proceed from the mest unjust and ignorant of men, that is fit to be offered unto thee; I implore pardon for my imperfections, fince I can have no claim of return for any performance of duty. The wicked repent of their fins: they who know God alk forgivenels for the imperfectnels of their worthip.

The abid feeks reward for his obedience, and merchants require the value of their capital flock; but I who am a fervant, have brought hope, not obedience, and am come to beg, not to traffic: Do unto me that which is werthy of thee; and treat me not according to my defert. Whether you flay, or whether you pardon, my face and head are on thy threshold. It is not for a fervant to direct: whatfoever thou commanded I shall perform." At the gate of the Kaba I faw a mendicant who was weeping bitterly and faring, "I ask not that then shoulded approve my fervices, draw the penceof, forgiveness over my offences."

Proflate in weakness, with my face on the earth, every morning, as I awake to restection, I exclaim, O God never will I forget thee; wilt thou bestow a thought upon me?"

TALE IV.

A thief got into the house of a religious man, but after the most diligent search, had the mortification not to find any thing. The good man, discovering his situation, threw the blanket on which he had slept, in the way which the thief had to pass, in order that he might not be disappointed. I have heard, that those who are truly pious, distress not the hearts of their enemies; how canst thou attain to this dignity, who art in strife and contention with thy friends? The affection of the righteous is the same in presence as in absence, not like those who censure you behind your back, but before your face are ready to due for you; when you are present, meek as lamb; but when absent, like the wolf a devourer of mankind.

TALE V.

Some travellers were journeying together, partakers of each others cares and comforts. I wanted to affociate myself with them, to which they would not consent. I remarked, that it was inconsistent with the benevolent manners of religious men, to turn away their faces from the poor, and to deny them the advantage of such company; that I know myself to possels such a degree of energy as would make me an active friend, and not an incumbrance to them. Although I am not mounted on a beast, I will endeavour to carry your burthens. One amongst them said, "be not uneasy at the words which you have heard, for not long ago a thief, under the appearance of a durwaish, got into our company.

How can one man know what is under another's garmant. The writer knows the contents of the letter. To return to my flere, as the condition of a derivatih is every where approved, they did not entertain any fulficien of his fanctity, but admitted him into their folicty. The outside of religion is a durwaishe's drefs, this is sufficient with a mortal face: let your actions be goad, and put on any drefs you choose; either wear a crown on your head, or carry a stag on your shoulders: for it is not coarse cloudling that conditutes the Zahid; be truly pious, and drafs in fattin. Sanctity consists in forfaking the world, with its lusts and appetites, not merely in changing the drefs. In war-fare manhood is required; of what use would armour be to an hermaphrodite? Sommarily, one day we had travelled until dark, and during the night slept at the soot of a castle; the grantess that under presence of going to perform his ablutions, catried off the water pot of one of his companions, and then went in quest-of plunder.

Behold this person who covered his body with a religious dross, made the veil of the kaba a howsing for an ass. As soon as he had got out of fight of the durwaither he scaled a bastion, and stole a casket. By the time it was daylight, the dark minded wretch had gone a great distance; and in the morning his innocent companions (whom he had left alleep) were all carried to the castle, and committed to prilion. From that day, we resolved not to increase our company, but honce-forward to lead the lives of recludes; because in solitude there is tranquility. When one of any tribe commits an act or folly, there is no distinction between high and low, the whole being distincted. Have you not observed that a single ox belonging to an herd, will contaminate all the own of the village?" I replied, "thanks to the God of majesty and glory, I am not destitute of the hencists which are enjoyed by the religious, although I am separated from their company; for I have derived instruction from this story, which will force men of our character for admonition during the remainder of life.

A zahid was invited to a feast by a king; when he sat down at the table he ate more sparingly than he was accustomed to do; and when he shood up to prayers he was longer than usual; in order that they might form an high opinion of his piety. I fear O Arab that them wilt not arrive at the Kaba, because the road which them are pursuing leads to Turkislan. When he returned home, he ordered the table to be spread that he might cat: His son, who had an acute understanding, said, "why father did you not cat any thing at the king's seast?" He answered, "in his presence, I ate nothing, to serve a purpose." The son replicit, "personn also your prayers over again, as you did nothing that will serve your purpose."

I remember that in the time of childhood, I was very religious: I rofe in the night, was punctual in the performance of my devotions, and abilinent. One night I had been fitting in the presence of my father, not having closed my eyes during the whole time, and with the holy Koran in my embrace; whild numbers around us were alleep. I said to my father not one of these lifteth up his head to perform his genusiunions; but they are all so fast assept, that you would say they are dead." He replied, " life of your father, it were better if thou also wert assept, than to be searching out the faults of mankind. I became weary of inthruction brutes, and of holding a mirror in the way of the blind; but the door of fignification continued one, and the concentration of diffeourse was extended in explanation of this verse of the Koran, "we are nearer to him than his jugular vein." My discourse had got to such a length that I said a friend is nearer to me than myself, but what is more wonderful, I am far from him, "What shall I do, to whom shall I address myself, since he is in my arms, whilst I am separated from him?" I am intoxicated with the wine of his discourse, and the dregs of the cup are in my hand." At this time a traveller passing by the company was so much animated by my last words, that he exclaimed with an emphasis that produced the acclamations of the whole, and the senselated with those who are near and ignorant, are at a distance; when the heater does not understand the discourse, expect not any effect of genius from the orator: included the plain of defire, in order that the orator may strike the ball of eloquence."

The judge released him, and faid, "was the world so narrow that you should steal only from such a friend as this? He replied." O my lead, have you not be id the faving, "sweep the houses of your friends but knock not at the doors of your enemies. When you fall into distress, resign not yourself to despair, thrip your enemies of their shin, and your triends of their jackets."

A certain king faid to a religious man, " do you ever think of mei." He answered, "yes, whenever I forget Gol." He sleeth every where whom Gol driveth from his gate; but whomsoever God inviteth he will not suffer to run to the door of any one.

TALE, XVII.

A foot traveller, harcheaded and without thoses, came from Cufeh and accompanied the caravan to Macca. He proceeded merrily, faying, "I am neither mounted on a camel, not like a mule under a load. I am no lord of a vailal, neither the flave of any king. I have no concern either about the prefent or the path. I draw my breath freely, and pass my life in comfort."

One mounted on a camel faid to him, "O durwaith, whither art thou going? return, or thou wilt perish in distress." He paid no attention, but entered the defert and proceeded on the journey. When we arrived at a place called Nukleh Mahmood, the rich man's destiny being accomplished, he died. The durwaith came to his pillow and faid, "I after encountering distributions are here alive, whilst you expired rising on a dromedary." A perfon wept all night by the side of a sick person; in the morning he died, and the sick man recovered. O my friend, many sleet horses have fallen down dead, whilst the lame as has come alive to the end of his journey. It has frequently happened that those in the vigour of health have been carried to their graves, whilst the wounded have recovered.

When the Shaikh's advice occurred to my recollection, I used to say, If the Câzy were of our party, he would rub his hands together in rapture; if the montesib would drink wine, he would excuse him who is intoxicated." One night I entered into the society of a tribe amongst whom was such a minstrel, you would say that the sound of his bow would break the arteries, and his voice was more horrid than the lamentations of a man for the death of his father. Sometimes the audience put their singers into their ears, that they might not hear him; and sometimes they placed their singers on their lips, as a signal for him to be silent. The heart may be captivated by the sound of sweet melody, but such a singer as thou are can only give delight by being silent. He had a daughter whom he gave me in marriage, with an hundred dinars for her dower. When some time had chapsed, she discovered her disposition, which was ill-natured, quarrelsom; obstinate and abusive; so that she destroyed my happiness, in the manner that has been said. A bad woman in the house of a good man, is his hell in this world. Take care how you connect yourself with a bad woman; desend us O Lord from this fiery trial. Once she reproached me saying, "are thou not he whom my father redeemed from captivity amongst the Franks for ten dinars?" I answered, "yes, he ransomed me for ten dinars, and put me into your hands for a hundred."

One of the hermits of Damaseus had passed many years in the desert in devotion, feeding on the leaves of trees. The king of that country, having gone to visit him, said, " It seems advisable to me that I should prepare a place for you in the city, where you may perform your devotions more conveniently, and others be benefitted by the blessing of your company, and take example from your good works." The hermit would not consent to this proposal. The ministers of state said, " It is necessary for the satisfaction of his majesty that you should remove into the city for a few days, to make an experiment of the nature of the place, when it you should find your precious time disturbed by the society of others, the choice will still remain in your power." They have related that the hermit came into the city, and that the king prepared for his reception, a garden belonging to the palace. A delightful situation, refreshing the spirits; red roses vying with the cheeks of a beautiful damsel, hyacinths resembling the ringlets of a beloved mistress. Altho' in the depth of winter, yet these slowers had the freshness of new born babes, who had not tasted the nurse's milk.

The branches of the trees were ornamented with fearlet flowers, suspensed amongst verdant solitage, shining like fire. The king sent him, immediately a beauteous han level, her face fair as the crescent moon, would safeinate an anchorite; and her angelic from arrayed in all the peacock's pride and splender, would at the first view deprive the most rigid moralist of the command of his passions. She was followed by a youth of rare beauty, and most exquisite symmetry of form. He is surrounded by mortals parched with thirst, whilst he who hath the appearance of a cup bearer bestoweth not drink. The eyes could not be satisfied with the fight of him, like one afflicted with the dropsy beholding the Euphrates. The hermit began to feast on dainties, was arrayed in clegant attire; regaled himself with fruits and persumer, and took delight in the company of the virgin, and her attendant. Once the king having an inclination to see him, found the holy man much altered in his appearance, having become plump, with a clear and rosy complexion. He was reclining on a pillow of damask silk, and the thiry formed boy shoot behind him with a tan made of peacock's feathers. The king rejoiced at his happy condition, and they talked on various subjects, until the king concluded the conversation by saying, "I have an affection for two descriptions of men in the twarld, the learned, and the recluse." A king, having some weighty affairs in agitation, made a vow, that in case of success he would distribute a certain sum of money amongst men dedicated to religion. When, on his wish being accomplished, it was necessary to perform the conditions of his vow, he gave a purse of direms to one of his favorite servants, to distribute amongst the Zahids. It was said that the youth was wife and prudent. The whole day he wandered about, and at night, when he returned, he killed the money, and hid it before the king, saying, that he had not found any Zahids. The king replied, "what a story is this, since I myself know four hundred Zahids in this city." He replied? "O lord of the world! these who are Zahids

When you wish to make up your burdens for quitting this world, the state of the beggar will be preferable to that of the monarch. The Durwaish exhibits a patched garment and shaved hair, but in truth his heart is alive and his passions subdued. He is not a person that will advance his pretentions among mankind, and if men oppose his inclination, he will not engage in strife. If a millidene should roll down from a mountain, he has but little faith who gets out of the way of it. The Durwaishe's course of duty consists in invoking and praising God, in obeying and worthing him, in giving alms, in being content, in believing the unity of the deity, and in reliance on God, with patient resignation to his will. Whosever is endowed with these qualities is a Durwaish indeed, although he be arrayed in a robe; and on the contrary, an tills prater, who neglects his prayers, and a slave to his pathen, who turns day into night in sensual gratifications, and night into day in drowly indolence, eating any thing that

TALE XLVIII

I saw some nolegays of fresh roles tied to a dome with some grass. I said, "what is this worthless grass that it should thus be in the company of roles?" The grass wept and said, "be silent, the benevolent forget not their associates; altho' I have neither beauty, nor colour, nor odour, still am I not the grass of God's garden? I am the servant of the munificent God, nourished from of old by his bounty; whether I possess any virtue or not, yet I look for the mercy of God. he is able to fare his fervant, although destitute of all other support. It is the custom that masters should liberate their old slaves. O God who hast ornamented this world with thy creatures, below liberty on this thine old servant. O Sady pursue the road to the temple of resignation. O arm of God walk in the path of righteousness. Unfortunate is that person, who turns his head from this gate, since he will not be able to find another.

TALE. XLIX.

They asked a wife man which was preferable, fortitude or liberality? he replied, "he who palls feth linerality both no need of fortitude. It is inscribed on the tomb of Bahram-Goar, that a lineral hand is preferable to a strong arm." Hatim Tai no longer exists, but his exalted name will remain famous for virtue to eternity. One of the courtiers replied, " it is beneath the dignity of a monarch to take shelter in the cottage of a mean peasant; we will pitch a tent on this spot, and light a fire." The peasant being apprized of the circumstance, prepared such sood as he could provide, which he brought, and pretented to the hing, and kissing the earth had, " The Sultan's high dignity will not faster my degradation by this condescention; but this gentlement are not willing that the peasant's humble state should be exalted." The king approved of his speech, and passed the night in the cottage. In the morning, he bestowed on the peasant a dress and money. I heard that he accompanied the king's stirrup a few paces, and said, "The king's dignity and splender have not suffered any diminution by his condescention in suffering himself to be entertained under the peasant's roof, but the corner of the rultic's cap has been exalted to the sun, by such a monarch having overshadowed his head."

He replied, it does not suit the high dignity of the Lord of the world to soil the hand of ambition with money belonging to such a beggar as myself, who has collected to grain by grain." He replied, "dent distress yourself on that account, as I thall pay it away to the Tartars. Fifthy things are fit for those who are impure. They say that dung does not make clean plaster, and we answer that we want it to stop dirty holes. If the water of a well belonging to a Christian is impure, what signifies this, if we use it to wash the corpse of a Jaw?" I heard that he slighted the king's commond, began to dispute, and to behave with insolence. They tell a story of a wrestler, who from adverse fortune was reduced to the extremity of misery. With a craving appetite, and destitute of the means of subsistence, he came complaining to his father, and requested leave to travel, if perchance by the strength of his arm, he might be able to accomplish his wishes. Talents and skill are of no value without being exhibited; they put lignum aloes on the fire, and rub must. The father said, of O son get out of your head impracticable imaginations, and draw back the foot of contentment within the skirt of safety, for the sages have said. Riches are not to be obtained by bodily exertion, but the remedy against want is to moderate our desires. No one can seize the skirt of wealth by force, it is soft labour to ancient the eyes of the blind with salve.

The presence of a wife man resembles pure gold, because whithersoever he goeth, they know his intrinsic value and consequence. An ignorant son of a rich man, is like leather-money passing current in a particular city, but which in a foreign country no one will receive for any thing. Thirdly, the beautiful person, to whom the hearts of the virtuous are inclined, set a high value on his company, and consider it an inner to do him service. According to the saying, a little beauty is presentable to great wealth. A beautiful person is the balm for a wounded heart, and is the key of the locked door. The beautiful person, wheresoever he goes, meets with honor and respect, even if his father and mother should turn him out with displeasure. I saw a peacock's feather in the leaves of a Koran. I said, I consider this an honor much greater than your quality deserves. He replied, be silent, for whosoever has beauty, wherever he puts his saot, doth not every one receive him with respect? The son who is endowed with elegance and beauty, careth not for his father's anger.

In expiation of what had happened, they fell at his feet, and after beftowing hypocritical kiffes on his hands and face, brought him into the bost, and carried him over, until they came to a pillar of Grecian building that fload in the river, when the heat-man called out "the best is in danger, let one of you who is the firenged and melt courageous get upon this pillar, and has hold of the heat' rope, that we may face the veriol." The young man, in the vanity of his firength, of which he had beafted, thoughtless of the offended heart of his enemy, paid no attention to this maxim of the fages, "If you have committed an offence towards another, and finable afterwards confer a hundred kindnesses, think not that he will forget to retaliate upon thee that langle offence; for the arrow may be extracted from the wound, but the fense of injury still rankles in the heart." What excellent advice gave Yuktash to Khiltash. If you have scratched your enemy, do not consider yourself safe.

Fling not a stone against the walls of a catile, led per chance a stone may be thrown at you from the castle. As soon as he had gathered the rope round his arm, and had reached the top of the pillar, the boatman snatched the rope out of his hand and drove forward the vessel. The helpless young man remained associated: for two days, he suffered much distress, and underwent great hardship; the third day sleep overpowered him and slang him into the river. After a day and a night he reached shore with some small remains of life. He sed on leaves of trees and room of grass, until he had somewhat recruited his strength, when he bent his course to the desert, and arrived thirsty and hungry, and saint at a well. He saw a number of people gathered round it, who were drinking a draught of water for a small piece of money. The young man, having no money, beseched them for water, which they denying, he attempted to obtain it by force, but in vam; he knocked some of them down and beat them. They at length overpowered him, beat him unmercifully and wounded him.

The hunter doth not always carry off the game; per chance himfelf may one day become the prey of the tiger. In like manner as it happened to one of the kings of Perfia, who possessing a ring set with a valuable jewel, went once on a party of pleasure with some of his particular associates to Mussiala Shiraz, and ordered that they should fix the ring on the dome of Asud, with a proclamation that whoever shot an arrow through the circlet of it, should have the ring. It chanced there were at that time four hundred experienced archers attending him, whose arrows all missed; but as a boy was playing on the terrace roof of the monastery, and shooting his arrows at random, the morning breeze conducted one of them through the ring. The prize was bestowed on him, together with other rich gifts. After this,, the boy burnt his bow and arrows, and on their asking him, why he had done so he replied, stat this my first repute may be lasting."

Forsake covetousness, and reign as a monarch; for the neck of the contented man is exalted. A certain king of that country intimated, that relying on his benevolence, and humane disposition, he was inclined to hope, that he would condescend to partake of his bread and falt. The Shaikh consented, the acceptance of such invitations being conformable to the custom of the prophet. Another time, when the king went to visit him, he arose, and embraced the monarch, and shewed him kindness. When the king was gone, one of the Shaikh's companions observed, that such condescention towards the king was contrary to rule; and asked what it meant. He replied, "have you not heard the saying,

The people of the town, on account of the respectability of his office, submitted to the calamity, and did not think it advisable to modest him, until one of the neighbouring preachers, who secretly was ill disposed towards him, came once to see him, and said, "I saw a dream, may it prove good!" He asked, "what did you see?" He replied, "I thought you had a sweet voice, and that the people were enjoying tranquillity from your discourse." The preacher, after restecting a little on the subject, said, "What a happy dream this is that you have seen, which has discovered to me my defect, in that I have an unpleasant voice, and that the people are distressed at my preaching. I have vowed that, in suture, I will read only in a low, tone. The company of friends was disadvantageous to me, because they look on my bad manners as excellent;

CHAPTER V.

Of Love and Youth.

TALE I.

They asked Husin Miconundee, "how happens it that Sultan Mahmood, having such a number of handlome slaves, remarkable for their exquisite beauty, has not such regard and assection for any one of them as for Iyaz, who has acthing extraordinary in his appearance?" He replied, "whatever assects the heart, appears beautiful to the sight. On whomsoever the Sultan places his assections, although he doth every thing that is bad, yet he will appear seemly. And him, whom the king rejects, not one of the household will carefs. Should any one look unfavourably on another, the beauty of Joseph would appear deformity; and if he casteth the eyes of desire on a Demon, he will seem a Cherub in his sight."

They tell of a certain great man, who having a very beautiful flave, for whom he entertained a virtuous affection, faid to one of his friends, "what a pity it is that this flave who is handfome, should be rude and infolent." He replied, "O brother, when you profel, friendship, look not for obedience; as between the lover and the milites, the relationship of master and servant has ceased. When the master plays and laughs with his beautiful handmaid, what is the wonder if she coquets in her turn, and he bears the burden of her blandshments like a slave? The slave ought to be employed in carrying water, and making bricks; he who is pampered, becomes insolent."

TALE IV.

A certain person having lost his heart, abandoned himself to despair. The object of his affection being a place of danger, a whirlpool; not a morsel with which you could hope to gratify the palate; not a bird that would fall into the net. When your sweet heart will not look at your gold, that metal and earth appear alike in your light. His friends belought him to relinquish this vain imagination, many besides himself being seized with this hopeless idea, and held in captivity by it. He lamenting said, a Desire my friends not to admonish me, since my destiny depends on the will of another. Warriors kill their exemies by the strength of their hands, and shoulders; but those who are beautiful destroy their friends. It is not consistent with the laws of love, though fear of death to relinquish our attachment to our mistress.

"As long as you maintain your own dignity of what value shall I appear in your eyes?" They informed the king's son, who was the object of his attachment, " that there frequents this place, a young man of amiable manners and conversation, from whom we hear brilliant discourses, and wonderful fallies of wit; but we apprehend that he has infanity in his head, and that his heart is inclaimed, for he has the appearance of being distractedly in love." The Prince, who knew himself to be the object of the young man's attachment, and that he had raised this dust of calamity, galloped his horse towards him. When the youth saw that the Prince intended to approach him, he wept, and fail, "The person who instifted the mortal wound, is again coming towards me, it should seem that his heart compassionateth him, whom he hath slain." Notwithstanting the Prince showed him great kindness; and asked from whence come you, what is your name, and what prosession do you follow? the youth was so immersed in the profundity of friendship and attachment, that absolutely he was not able to utter a word.

Although you know the feven portions of the Koran by heart, when you become diffracted with love, you will not remember your alphabet. The Prince faid, "why do not you speak to me, who am numbered amongst the durwaithes, nay am devoted to their service?" Being at length encouraged by the samiliarity of his frient's descents, he railed up his head from the buffetings of the billows of affection and said, "It is wonderful how I can exist; when admitted to your presence, and that having heard your voice, I should be able to reply." Having said thus he uttered an exclamation, and surrendered his soul to God. It would not be surprizing if one should be killed at the gate of his bloved, but it would be assumiting if he came there alive, and brought back his soul in safety.

There was a certain youth of most exquisite beauty, to whom his totor, through the frailty of human nature, became so attached, that he would be frequently reciting these words, "My mind is not so weakly engaged in the contemplation of your heavenly sace, that I can preserve any recollection of myself. I cannot restrain my eves from beholding you, although I perceive the arrow that comes directly against me." Once the youth said, "I entreat you to give the same attention to my behaviour as you bestow on my studies, and if you should deem any part of my conduct reprehensible, apprize me thereof, that I may endeavour to change it." He replied, "O my son, require this of some one else, for the eyes with which I view you, see nothing but virtues.

I remember that one night one of my dearest friends entered the door, when I was so impatient to receive him, that in rising from my feat, the lamp was entinguished by the sleeve of my garment. It is however better to fee a sweet-heart after intervals of absence, than to be fatiated with a continuance of her company. TALE IX.

I saw a learned man captivated by his attachment for a person, and submitting with incredible patience to his insolent behaviour. Once, by way of admonition, I said to him, I know that there is nothing criminal in your attachment to this person, and that this friendship is founded on pure virtue; nevertheless it is unbecoming the dignity of a learned man to expose himself to calumny, and to suffer insult from rude people. He replied, "O triend, cease to reproach my destiny, for I have frequently reslected on the subject you mention, and find it easier to suffer injury on his account, than to relinquish him; and the sages have said, that it is easier to reconcile the heart to labour, than to refuse your eyes the sight of a beloved object. Having said thus he set out on a journey, and I experienced much disquietude, at the separation. The opportunity of intercourse was lost. No one knows the value of pleasure until he has suffered adversity. Return thousand put me to death, for to die in your presence is better than to live in your absence. However by the blessing of God after a time he returned. But he had lost the melodious voice of David, and his beauty that had resembled Joseph was faded, his chin being covered with dust like the quince, so that the incomparable splender of his beauty was obscured. He expected that I should have catched him in my arms, when stepping aside, I said.

The verdant foliage of spring is become yellow. Put not the kettle on the hearth, for our fire is cooled. How long will your pride and vanity last? reslect that the scason of your power is elapsed. Go to him who wants you, sport your-fels with those who are willing to buy you. They asked one of the inhabitants of Baghdad his opinion of handsome youths: He replied, "no good is to be found amongst them, as long as they appear delicate; for then they are insolent; but when they become rough, they are courteous; or in other words, whilst handsome and delicate, their behaviour is rude, when they become rough, they are kind and friendly. The youth, whilst his face continues smooth, has bitter words, and a morose disposition; when his beard appears, and he is arrived at manhood, he mixes with society and cultivates friendship."

What is mest strange, the crow was equally distressed by the society of the parrot, and lamenting his sate, complained of the vicishtudes of fortune, and rubbing the claws of fortow one against the other was saying, "What ill luck, what mean sate, what a reverse of fortune! It suited my dignity to be struting on a garden wall in company with another crow. It is sufficient imprisonment for a holy man, that he should be compelled, to associate with profligates. How far have I sinned, that in punishment thereof my life should be spent in company with such a worthless conceited pratter. No one will approach a wall on which your picture is painted. If you had admittance into paradise every one would prefer hell to your company." I have brought this example to shew that how much soever men of understanding may despite the ignorant, there are an hundred times more distressed in the company of the wife.

A devotee being at a finging party in company with some profligates, one of the beauties of Balk said to him, " if you are displeased don't look sour, for you are bitter enough to us already. I had a friend with whom I travelled many years, we ate our bread, and falt together, and enjoyed the rights' of friendship to an uncommon degree. Afterwards, on account of some paltry advantage, he suffered me to be displeased, and our intimacy coased. But notwithstanding this difference, there still subsisted a cordial attachment on both sides, for I heard that he was one day reciting in a company these verses of mine, D d d.

When my mistress comes with sweet smiles, she adds more salt to the wound: how happy should I be if the tips of her ringlets could sall into my hand, like the sleeve of the liberal man into the hands of the poor." A number of friends who were present praised the verses, not for any merit that they possessed, but from the generolity of their own dispositions; he extolled them more than any one, and regretting the loss of a long established friendship, confessed that he had been to blame. Perceiving that he was inclined to a reconciliation, I sent these verses and made peace with him, "Was there not a treaty of fidelity between us, that you offended me, and shewed me a want of affection? I quitted society and fixed my heart on you, not suspecting that you would so soon have changed. But now, if you are inclined to peace, return; and you shall be dearer to me than you were before."

A person having a handsome wise who died, her mother, a decrepid old woman, for the sake of the dower, settled in his house. He was teized to death by her society, but on account of the dower, he had no remedy for the evil. One of his acquaintance asked him how he tound himself, since his separation from his dearly beloved wife. He replied, "not seeing my wife, is not so distressing, as the sight of her mother. The rose is plucked, but the thorn remains. They have carried off the treasure, but the snake remains. It is better to see one's eye fixed on the point of a spear, than to look at the sace of an enemy. It is better to break off a thousand friendships, than to endure the fight of a single enemy."

I was obliged to take shelter under the shade of a wall, in hopes that some one would relive me from the distressing heat of summer, and quench my thirst with a draught of water. Suddenly, from the shade of the portico of a house, I beheld a semale form, whose beauty it is impossible for the tongue of elequence to describe; in so much that it seemed as if the dawn was rising in the obscurity of night, or as if the water or immertality was issuing from the land of darkness. She held in her hand a cup of snow water, into which the sprinkled sugar, and mixed it with the juice of the grape. I know not whether what I perceived, was the fragrance of rose water, or that she had insufed into it a sew drops from the blossom of her cheek. In thort, I received the cup from her beautious land, and drinking the contents found myself restored to new life. The thirst of my heart is not such that it can be allayed with a drop of pure water, the streams of whole rivers would not satisfy it. How happy is that fortunate person whose eyes every morning may beheld such a countenance. He who is intoxicated with wine will be sober again in the course of the night; but he who is intoxicated by the cupbearer, will not recover his senses until the day of judgment.

I contracted a friendship for a young man, with so warm on attachment, that his beauty was the Keblah of my eyes, and his society the chief comfort of my life. No mortal on earth ever possessed in the beautiful a form, perhaps he was an angel from heaven. After his decease, I swore never again to cultivate friendship, because no other mortal can ever equal him. His sudden death overwhelmed his family in the deepest affliction. I continued at his grave for many days, and this is one of the sentences which I uttered on the loss of him. Would to God that on the day, when sate overtook thee, the hand of desiny had also smitten me with the sword of death, that I might not thus have been left to behold the world without thee. He who could never take reft until he had spread roses and narcistates, through the vicissitude of heaven the roses of his cheek are scattered whill thorns and briars grow over his grave. After a separation from him, I came to a fixed determination that during the remainder of my days, I would fold up the carpet of pleasure, and abitain from society. It would be profitable to explore the ocean, but for the dread of the waves. The society of the rose would be delightful, but for the sear of thorns. They tell a story of a Cazy of Hamadan, that he was enamoured with a Farrier's beautiful daughter to such a degree, that his heart was inflamed by his passion, like a horse shoe red hot in a forge. Unripe grapes are four, but keep them a day or two and they will become sweet. The Cazy having said thus repaired to his court. Some well disposed persons, who were in his service, made obeliance and said, 40 that with permission they would represent a matter to him, although it might be deemed unpolite, as the Sages have said, it is not allowable to argue on every subject; it is criminal to describe the saults of a great personage; but that in consideration of the kindness which his servants had experienced from him, not to represent what to them appears advisable, is a species of treachery. The laws of restitude require that you should conquer this inclination, and not give way to unlawful desires for the office of Cazy is a high dignity, which ought not to be polluted with a crime. She who has loft her reputation, what cares she for the character of another? It has frequently happened that a good name acquired in fifty years has been lost by a single improdence." The Cazy approved the admonition of his cordial friends, praised their understanding and fidelity, and faid, "the advice which my friends have given, in regard to my situation, is perfectly right, and their arguments are unanswerable. The Cazy was in this situation when one of his servants entering said, "why are you sitting thus, arise and run, as sast as your feet can carry you, for your enemies have laid a snare for you, nay they have said the truth. But whilst this fire of strife is yet but a spark, extinguish it with the watter of good management; for it may happen that to-morrow when it breaks out into a slame, it will spread throughout the world." The Cazy smiling looked on the ground and said, "If the lion has his paw on the game, what signifies it if the dog should come. Turn your face towards your mistress, and let your rival bite the back of his hand." That very night they carried inteligence to the king of the wickedness which had been committed in his dominions, and begged to know his commands. He who quickly lays hold of the fword in his anger, will gnaw the back of his hand through forrow." I heard that at the dawn of day, the king with some of his principal countiers came to the Cazy's bed chamber. He saw the candle burning, and the mistress sitting down, with the wine spilt, and the glass broken; and the Cazy stupissed between sleep and intoxication, lost to all sense of his existence. The king kindly waked him, "and said, get up for the sun is risen." The Cazy perceiving him, asked, "from what quarter has the sun risen?" The king answered from the East. The Cazy replied, "God be praised, then the door of repentance is still open, according to the tradition, the gate of repentence shall not be shut against the servants of God, until the sun shall rise in the west; adding, now I ask pandon of God, and vow to him that I will repent. These two things have led me unto sin, ill fortune, and a weak understanding. If you seize me I deserve it, but if you pardon me, forgiveness is better than vengeance.

The king "faild repentance can now avail nothing, as you know that you are about to fuffer death. What good is there in a thief's repentance, when he has not the power of throwing a rope into the upper flory. Tell him who is tall, not to pluck the fruit, for he of low flature cannot extend his arm to the branch. To you who have been convicted of such wickedness, there can be no hopes of escape." The king having said thus, ordered the officers of justice to take charge of him. The Cazy said, "I have yet one word to speak to your majesty." He asked, "what is it?" He replied, "as long as I labour under your displeasure, think not that I will let go the skirt of your garment.

Although the crime which I have committed may be unpardonable, still I entertain some hopes from your clemency. The king said, "you have spoken with admirable facetiousness and wit, but it is contrary to reason and to law that your wisdom and elequence should rescue you from the hand of justice. To me it seems advisable that you should be slung headlong from the top of the castle to the earth, as an example for others." He replied, "O monarch of the universe, I have been softered in your family, and am not singular in the commission of such crimes, therefore I beseech you to precipitate some one else, in order that I may benefit by the example." The king laughed at his speech, and spared his life; and said to his enemies, "All of you are burthened with desects of your own, reproach not others with their failings. Whosever is sensible of his own saults, carps not at another's failing."

TALE XXI.

There was an affectionate and amiable youth who was betrothed to a beautiful girl. I have heard that as they were failing on the ocean, they fell together into a whirlpool. When the mariners went to the young man that they might eatch his hand, and fave him from perifhing, in that unhappy juncture, he called aloud and pointed to his miftress from the midt of the waves, "Leave me and take the hand of my beloved." The whole world admired him for that speech, and when he was expiring he was heard to say, "Learn not the tale of love from that saithless wretch, who forgets his beloved in the hour of danger." Thus ended the lives of those lovers; hearken and learn from those of experience, for Sady is as conversant in the ways and customs of love, as the Arabic language is familiar at Baghdad. Fix your heart on the midress whom you have chosen, and be blind to every other earthly object. If Leila and Majnoon were now living, they might learn the history of love from this book.

CHAPTER VI.

On Imbecility and Old age.

TALE I.

I was engaged in a disputation with some learned men in the Mosque of Damascus, when suddenly a young man entering the gate said, " is there any one amongst you who understands the Persian language?" They pointed to me, I asked what was the matter. He answered, " an old man, of a hundred and sifty years of age, is in the agonies of death, and says something in the Persian language, which we do not comprehend. If you will have the goodness to take the trouble to go, you will obtain your reward: perhaps he may want to make his will." When I came to his pillow, he said, "I was in hopes that I should have spent the small remnant of my life in case, but I can scarcely draw my breath. Alas that at the table of variegated life, I are a little and they said it is enough." I explained to the Damasciens in Arabic, the signification of the discourse. They wondered that at his advanced age, he should grieve for worldly life. I then asked him how he found himself. He replied, "what can I say?

I will exert my attacht endeavours to gain your affection, and if you should treat me unkindly, I will not be offended; or if like the parrot your food should be sugar, I will devote my sweet life to your support. You have not met with a youth of a rude disposition, with a weak understanding, head strong, a gadder, who would be constantly changing his situation and inclinations, sleeping every night in a new place, and every day forming some new intimacy. Young men may be lively and handsome, but they are inconstant in their attachments. Look not for sidelity from those, who with the eyes of the nightingale, are every instant singing upon a different rosebush. But old men pass their time in wisdom and good manners, not in the ignorance and srivolity of youth. Seek for one better than yourself, and having found him, consider yourself fortunate; for with one like yourself, you would pass your life without improvement."

He faid, "I spoke a great deal after this manner, and thought that I had made a conquest of her heart; when all of a sudden, she setched a cold sigh from the bottom of her heart, and replied; all the fine speeches that you have been uttering, have not so much weight in the scale of my reason, as one single sentence which I heard from my nurse; that if you plant an arrow in the side of a young woman, it is not so painful as the society of an old man. In short," continued he, "it was impossible to agree, and our differences ended in a separation. After the time prescribed by law, she married a young man of an impossous temper, ill natured and in indigent circumstances; so that she suffered the injuries of violence, with the evils of penury; however, the returned thanks for her lot, and said, God be praised, that I escaped from infernal torment, and have obtained this permanent blessing. Amidst all this violence, and impetuality of temper, I will put up with your airs, because you are hands see. It is better to burn with you in hell, than to be in paradise with the other. In the territory of Diarbekr, I was the guest of a very rich old man, who had a handfome son. One night, he said, "during my whole life, I never had any child but this son.

Near this place is a sacred tree, to which men resort to offer up their petitions. Many nights at the soot of this tree I besought God, until he bestowed on me this son."

I heard that the son was saying to his friends, in a low tone of voice, "how happy should I be to know where that tree grows, in order that I might implore God for the death of my sather." The sather was rejoicing in his son's wisdom; whilst the son despited his

Once in the vigour of youth I had performed a long journey, and at night, being fatigued, remained at the foot of a mountain. A debilitated old man, who arrived after the caravan, faid, "why do you fleep? get up, this is not a place for repose." I faid to him, "how can I proceed, not having the use of my feet?" He replied, "have you not heard how it has been said, that proceeding and halting, is better than running until you are satigued." Oye, who wish to reach the end of your day's journey, be not in haste; listen to my counsel, and learn patience. The Arab horse makes two stretches on full speed, and the camel travels slowly day and night.

his merriment had ceased, and his countenance was much altered. I asked him what was the matter. He replied, "When I became the father of children I left off childish sport. When you are grown old, give up puerilities; and leave play and joking to youth. Look not for the sprightliness of youth in old age, since the stream will not return again to the spring head. When the field of corn is sit for the sickle, it does not wave in the wind, with that vigour, as when it was green. The season of youth has elapsed, alas! those days which enlivened the heart. The lion has lost the strength of his paw, and like an old leopard, I am now contented with a cheese." One day, through the ignorance of youth, I spoke sharply to my mother, which vexing her to the heart, she sat down in a corner, and wept, saying, "Have you forgotten all the trouble that you gave me in your infancy, that you thus treat me with unkindness? What a good saying was that of an old woman to her son, when she saw him able to subdue a tiger, having the strength of an elephant. that the high God might restore his son to health. After a little consideration he said, " it is better to read the Koran, as it is at hand, and the slocks are at a distance." A holy man hearing this said, " he preserved reading the Koran because the words are at the tip of his tongue, and the money is in the inside of his heart. I have heard, that, not long ago, a decrepid old man, in his dotage, took it into his head to marry, and worked a beautiful virgin named Gem; who like a calket of jewels, had been concealed from the tight of men. The nuptials were celebrated with all the splender usual on such occasions. Shortly after, he began complaining to his friends, and attempted to make it appear that the impudent girl had dishonored his family. Such strife and contention ensued between the parties, that at last the cause was brought before the superintendent of the police, and the Cazy. When matters had come to this pass, "Sady faid, the girl is not to blame, how can you, with your trembling hand, be able to bore pearls."

and on a journey, money is in danger of being loft; for either the thief may carry it off all at once, or the possessor may consume it by degrees. But knowledge is a perennial spring of wealth, and if a man of education ceases to be opulent, yet he need not be forrowful, for knowledge of itself is riches. A man of learning, wherever he goes, is treated with respect, and fits in the uppermost feat, whilst the ignorant man gets only a seanty fare, and encounters diffrest. After enjoying, it is diffresting to be obliged to obey, and be who has been used to caresses, cannot bear roughusage from the world." his tyrannic arm, dared not prefume to laugh, nor venture to speak; for he used to smite the silver cheeks of the one, and would sometimes put the chrystal legs of the other into the stocks. In short, I heard that some part of his conduct having been discovered, they beat him, and expelled him, and gave the school to a pious good man, of so meek and patient a temper, that he never spoke a word, but when he was forced to it; and nothing ever proceeded from his tongue, that could give offence to any one. The boys had got the sear of the old master out of their heads, and seeing the new one of angelic manners, they be came surious towards one another; and relying on his sorbearance, they neglected their studies, and spent most of their time in playand without finishing their copies, I toke their tablets on one another's heads. When the smaller is relax in his discipline, the boys play at leap-frog in the market place. A fortnight after, I passed by the gate of the Mosque, and saw the old master, whom they had encouraged and reinstated in his office.

An experienced old man, hearing me, laughed and faid, have you not heard what has been related? "A king fent his fon to fehopl, and placed a filver tablet under his arm. The fon of a religious man, who succeeded to an immense fortune by the will of his uncle, became a diffipated and debauched profligate, in so much, that he left no heinous crime unpractised, nor was there any intoxicating drug which he had not tasted. Once I admonished him saying, "O my son, wealth is a running stream, and pleasure revolves like a millstone; or in other words, prosuse expence suits him only who has a certain income.

When you have no certain income, be frugal in your expences, because the sailors have a song, that if the rain does not sall in the mountains, the Tigris will become a dry bed of sand in the course of a year. Practise wildom and virtue, and relinquish sensuality, for when your money is spent, you will soffer distress, and expose yourself to shame." The young man, seduced by music and wine, would not take my advice, but in opposition to my arguments said, it is contrary to the wisdom of the sages to disturb our present enjoyments by the dread of suturity. Why should they, who possess fortune, suffer distress by anticipating forrow: go and he merry, O my heart-enchanting friend! we cught not to be aneasy to-dry for what may happen to-morrow. How would it become me, who am placed in the uppermost feat of liberality, and have contracted an alliance with muniscence, so that the same of my bounty is a topic of general conversation.

When a man has acquired reputation by liberality and monificence, it does not become him to tie up his money bags. When your good name has been spread through the street, you cannot thut your door against it." I perceived that he did not approve of my admenition, and that my warm breath did not affect his cold iron; I ceased advising, and quitting his society, returned into the corner of safety, in conformity to the saying of the philosophers, "Admonish and exhort as your duty requires, if they mind not, it does not concern you. It will soon come to pass that you will see the filly sellow with his feet in the stocks, there similarly his hands and exclaiming, also that I did not listen to the wife man's advice?"

The son of the durwaish on hearing this said, "hold your tongue, for before your father can move himself from under this heavy stone, mine will have arrived at paradise." There is a saying of the prophet, "that to the poor, death is a state of rest." The ass who carries the lightest burden travels casicst. In like manner the durwaish who bears the burthen of poverty will enter the gate of death lightly loaded; whilst he who lives in assume, with ease and comfort, will doubtless, on that very account, find death terrible. And, in every view, the captive who is released from consinement, is happier than the nubleman who is taken prisoner.

To me, who owe my support to the bounty of the great, this language was not at all grateful. I said, "O my friend, the rich are the revenue of the poor, a store house for the recluse, the pilgrim's hope, and the asylum of travellers. They are the bearers of burthens for the relief of others. Themselves cat along with their dependents and interiors, and the remainder of their bounty is applied to the relief of widows, aged people, relations and neighbours. The rich are charged with pious dedications, the performance of vows, the rites of hospitality, alms, offerings, the manumission of slaves, gifts, and facrifices. By what means can you attain to their power, who can perform only your genuflexions, and even those, with an hundred difficulties? The rich perform both moral any religious duties, in the most perfect manner, because they possess, with minds void of care. For the power of obedience is found in good meals, the truth of worship in a clean garment. For what strength can there be with an empty stomach? what bounty from an empty hand?

He sleeps uneasily at night who knows not how to provide for tomorrow. The ants store up in summer, that in winter they may enjoy rest. Leisure and poverty are not sound together, and satisfaction dwelleth not with diffress. One is standing up to evening prayers, whilst the other is sitting down wishing for his supper. How can these two be compared together? He who possesses wealth is busied in devotion, whilst he who is distressed in his circumstances has a differenced heart. Therefore the worship of the rich is more ecceptable, their minds being collected and not distracted, for as they are possessed of the means of substitution, they can turn their whole thoughts to devotion. The Arabians say, God defend me from distracted poverty, and from the mighbourhood of him whom I dislike. And there is a tradition from the prophet, that poverty has a black countenance in both worlds." My antagonal asked, "have you not heard that the prophet faid, poverty is my glary?" I replied, "he tilent, for the prophet alludes to them who fuffer in poverty of spirit, with submission to the arrows of destiny; and not those who in a religious garb soll the seraps which have been given them in charity. O lend sounding empty drum, how will you manage on the march without previsions? If then art a man, free thyself from wordly avarice, instead of turning in your hand a string of a thousand beads. A durwaish without vital religion, will not rest until his poverty ends in blasphemy. He who is in poverty, is in danger of blasphemy. Without the command of riches, you cannot clothe the naked, nor use means for liberating captives: How can such as ourselves attain to their dignity, and what comparison is there, between the hand that bestows, and that which receives? Do you not perceive that the Almighty revealed to us in the Koran, the enjoyments of the dwellers in paradise? For them are appointed fruits in gardens of delight, in order that you may know that he who is intent on gaining a subsistence, is excluded from this portion of bliss and that tranquillity of mind requires a fixed income.

To those who are thirsty, the whole world appear in their dreams a spring of a water. You will every where see a person who is in didress commit atrocious actions without any he-stration; not being deterred by the dread of future punishment, he distriminates not between lawful and unlawful. If a dog is thruck on the head with a clod of earth, he jumps up with joy, thinking it to be a bone; and if two persons should carry a corpse on their shoulders, a mean wretch might suppose it a tray of victuals; but the rich man, whom God hath regarded with the eye of savor, by the personmence of what is sawful, is preserved from the commission of what is illegal. Thus, although I have not fully discussed the sudject, nor adduced any substantial proofs in support of my arguments, I rely on your justice for a decision. Did you ever see a mendicant with his arms tied to his back, or in prison; or the veil of innocence rent, or the hand amputated (for thest) without its having been occasioned by poverty? In general, those in indigent circumstances, want chastity; as those who are starving steal bread. When a raveness cur gets meat, he enquires not whether the steff is of Saleh's camel or of the ass of Dujal. Many men, naturally well disposed, have been led by poverty into wickedness, and have given their good name to the wind of discepute. Amidst the cravings of hunger, the power of abstaining ceases, poverty fnatcheth the reins out of the hand of piety." At the moment that I uttered these words, the durwaishe's patience being exhausted, he attacked me with all the vehomence of loquacity, and said, "You have exaggrated their praise to such a degree, and have talked so extravagantly on the subject, that one would suppose them to be the antidote against the venom of poverty, and the key of the stores of providence. Proud of their riches, and vain of that dignity of which they think themfolios purfored, and varining in their figerially, they treat all others as their inferiors; they never think it their duty to look kindly on any one; ignorant of what the fages have faid, that wholvever is inferior to others in picty, although he may exceed them in wealth, thought in appearance a rich, is in reality a poor man. If an empty fellow, on account of his wealth, behaves proudly towards a wife man, reckon fuch a one an als, although he be an Ambergris ox." I fail, " speak not disdainfully of them, as ' they are the masters of generosity." He replied, " you speak erroneously, for they are flaves to their money. Of what use are they, if they are the clouds of August, and do not shower down benefits; or of what advantage, if they are the fountain of light, and do not thing on any one; and are mounted on the fleed of power without performing any course? They fir not a step in the fervice of God, and part not with a direm without distressing you with the obligation. Abraham by arguments, began to quarrel, as God hath faid, "Of a truth, if thou wilt not give up this point, I will flone thee." He gave abuse, I retorted harshly, he tore the collar of my garment, and I laid hold of his beard. We were tumbling over one another, and the people running after us, laughing and aitonished at our conduct. In short, we referred our dispute to the Cazy, and agreed to abide by his impartial decision, in order that a mahommedan judge might resolve, what was advisable, and discriminate between the rich and the poor. When the Cazy saw our faces, and heard our discourse, he such his chin no the collar of resection, and after mature consideration raised up his head and faid, "O thou who hast spoken in praise of the rich, I would have thee to know that there is no rose without a thern; and that wine is accompanied with intoxication, hidlen treasure has it's dragon; in the same place which has royal pearls, are razenous croco-files; the enjoyment of worldly pleasure, is followed by the sting of death; and the lights of paradise are intercepted by crafty satan.

He ought to submit to violence from an enemy, who wishes to enjoy a friend, because the treasure and the dragon, the rose and the thorn, forrow and gladness, are linked together. Observe you not that in the garden there are odoriserous plants, as well as dry trunks? in like manner in the circle of rich men, there are grateful and ungrateful persons; and in the number of durwaishes some exercise patience, and others do not. If every hailstone was a pearl, the market would be as full of them as of shells. The beloved of the almighty consist of rich men, who have the disposition of durwaishes, and of durwaishes possessed of noble minds. The greatest rich man is he who relieves the distreties of the poor; and the best of durwaishes is he who looketh not to the rich for his support: for God hath faid, the who trusteth in god, requires no other's help." The Cazy, having ceased reprehending menturned towards the durwaish and said, to You who have advanced that the rich spend their time in wickedness, and are intoxicated with luxury; it is true there are such people as you have described, who are described in zeal,

If thou with to [derive benefit from worldly riches, shew that kindness towards thy fellow creatures that God hath bestowed on thee. The Arabs say, " be bountiful without accounting it an obligation, when most certainly the benefit will return to you." Wherever the tree of beneficence takes root, it sends forth branches beyond the sky. If you entertain hopes of eating the fruit, cultivate the tree kindly, and put not a saw at it's root. A weak enemy, who becomes obedient, and shews friendship, does so with no other design but to become a more powerful adversary; as they have said, "Even the sincerity of friends is not to be relied on, what then is to be expected from the flattery of enemies?" He who despises a weak enemy, resembles him who neglects a spark of fire. Extinguish it to day, whilst you are able, for when it is sues into a same, it destroys a world. Permit not your enemy to string his bow, whilst you are able to pierce him with an arrow.

Speak in such manner between two enemies, that should they afterwards become friends, you may not be put to the blush. Hostility between two people is like fire, and the evil sated backbiter supplies such. Afterwards, when they are reconciled together, the backbiter is hated, and despited by both parties. To kindle a slame between two persons, is to burn your-self inconsiderately in the midst. Whisper to your friends, in order that your bloodshirsty enemy may not over-hear you. Anger, when excessive, createst terror; and kindness out of season destroys authority. Be not so severe as to cause distuit, nor so lenient as to encourage audacity. Severity and lenity should be tempered together; like the surgeon, who, when he uses the lancet, applies also a plaster. A wise man carries not severity to excess, nor suffers such relaxation as will lessen his own dignity. He over rates not himself, neither doth he altogether neglect his consequence. Jumilhaid introduced distinctions in dress, and was the first person who were a ring on the inner. They asked him why he had given the whole grace and ornament to the left, whilst excellence belong to the right hand? He replied the right hand is completely ornamented by its own rectitude. Feridoon commanded the chinese embroiderers to embroider the following words on the outside of his parilion, "O man of prudence, do thou good to the wicked; for the virtuous are of themselves great and happy."

They faid to a great man, " feeing that the right possesses so much excellence, what is the reason of their wearing the ring on the left hand?" He replied, " dont you know that the virtuous man is always neglected? He who hath appointed both happiness and misery, bestoweth either virtue or riches."

He is the proper person to give advice to kings, who neither dreads the loss of his head, nor seeks for reward. He who is orthodox, whether you pour money under his feet, or apply an Indian seimitar to his head, has neither hope nor fear, from any one; and this is the true basis of piety.

They asked a wife man, why out of many famous trees which the Almighty hath created, lofty and fruit-bearing, the cypress alone is called free, although it beareth not fruit. He replied, "every tree hath its appointed fruit and featon, with which it is at one time flourishing, and at another time deflitate and withering; to neither of which states the cypress is exposed, being always flourishing, as is the flut of those who are free. Place not your heart on that which is transitory; for the river Tigris will continue to flow through Bughdai, after that the Khalifs shall have ceased to reign. If you are able, imitate the date tree in liberality, but if you have not the means of munisicence, be free like the cypress."

CONCLUSION OF THE BOOK.

Through God's affiliance, the book entitled the Garden of Rofes is now brought to a conclufion. Throughout the whole of this work, I have not followed the cultom of authors, by inferting veries borrowed from former writers. It is better, to be dreffed in one's own old garments, than to ask the loan of a new vest. The discourses of Sady are for the most part cheerful, and mixed with pleasantry; on which account the short sighted extend the tongue of reproach, saying, that it is not the part of a wise man to waste the brain in vain pursuits, and to endure the smoke of the lamp without deriving any advantage; however the enlightened minds of the intelligent, who comprehend the tendency of a discourse, are sensible that the pearls of salutary advice, are threaded on the string of style; and that the bitter medicine of admonition, is mixed with the honey of pleasantry, in order that the reader might not in disgust refuse his acceptance.

We have offered our advice in its proper place, and spent a long time on the undertaking; if it is not listened to with the ear of avidity, yet the mellinger performs his duty by delivering the mellinger. O thou who perused this book, entreat the mercy of God for its author, and pardon for him who transcribed it, and ask for your own fell whatever good you may require, after which implore forgiveness for the owner of it. The book is halfied through the aid of that Monarch who is the bestower of all good gifts.
